

1
2
3
4 5 UNITED STATES BANKRUPTCY COURT
6 EASTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

7 In re:

8 KEITH T. and CAROLYN J. HAGENEY,

9 Debtors.
10

)
) Case No. 08-04506-PCW7
)

) MEMORANDUM DECISION RE:
) U.S. TRUSTEE'S MOTION TO ) DISMISS FOR ABUSE
)

11 PATRICIA C. WILLIAMS, Presiding Judge

12 THIS MATTER comes before the Court on the U.S. Trustee's Motion to Dismiss the Chapter 13 7 for Abuse pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 707(b). The U.S. Trustee is seeking a finding of abuse under the 14 provisions of both § 707(b)(2), which provides for a statutory presumption of abuse in certain cases, and 15 § 707(b)(3), which provides for a finding of abuse when either (a) the debtor has filed the petition in bad 16 faith, or (b) the totality of the circumstances of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

17 ISSUE

18 The U.S. Trustee argues that this case should be dismissed or converted to a Chapter 13 as 19 11 U.S.C. §§ 707(b)(2) and (b)(3) preclude the granting of relief in this Chapter 7. Pre-BAPCPA, there 20 was a single test set forth in § 707(b) to determine whether the granting of Chapter 7 relief would be a 21 "substantial abuse" of the bankruptcy system. Although the burden of proof remains on the moving 22 party, after the statutory modifications contained in BAPCPA, the standard to be met by the party 23 seeking dismissal of the Chapter 7 under § 707 was lowered from substantial abuse to abuse. In re 24 Siegenberg, 2007 WL 6371956 (Bankr. C.D. Cal 2007); In re Harris, 279 B.R. 254 (B.A.P. 9th Cir.
25 2002). The statute now provides two different tests to determine whether abuse is present. The means 26 test in § 707(b)(2) applies a formulaic approach to determine if a debtor is above or below median 27 income. If found to be above median income, it is presumed to be an abuse to allow the granting of 28 Chapter 7 relief. If no presumption arises as the debtor is below median income, the test for abuse under

MEMORANDUM DECISION RE: . . . - 1

1 § 707(b)(3) is applicable. In re Pak, 343 B.R. 239 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2006); In re Egebjerg, 574 F.3d 2 1045 (9th Cir. 2009).

3 The court in In re Jensen, 407 B.R. 378, 384 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2009) stated:

4 The Court agrees with those authorities holding that the Means Test is only the first step 5 in determining whether a debtor's petition is abusive. The Means Test functions as an 6 initial screen to weed out those Chapter 7 petitions that are most clearly abusive. As one 7 court explains, 'Congress intended that there be an easily applied formula for 8 determining when the Court should presume that a debtor is abusing the system by filing 9 a chapter 7 petition.' In re Fowler, 349 B.R. 414, 420-21 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006).
However, as with any bright-line rule, the Means Test presumption does not always provide the most accurate snapshot of the debtor's financial situation. That is to be expected; a formula complex enough to accurately predict every single debtor's ability to pay would be impossible to effectively administer. The Means Test sacrifices some level of accuracy in the interest of administrative efficiency.

10 Fortunately, the Bankruptcy Code anticipates that the Means Test alone cannot eliminate 11 every single abusive filing and provides a backstop, the § 707(b)(3)(B) totality of the 12 circumstances test. The totality of the circumstances test is best seen as providing a 13 chance for the Court to refine the Means Test estimate. Since it permits individualized case-by-case examination, the totality of the circumstances test can weigh unusual circumstances that the Means Test does not-and could not reasonably be expected to-account for.

14 In the current situation, the U.S. Trustee argues that application of the means test per § 707(b)(2) 15 results in a presumption of abuse as the debtors are above median income. Alternatively, if the debtors 16 are found to be below median income and the presumption is inapplicable, § 707(b)(3) precludes the 17 granting of Chapter 7 relief.

18 MEANS TEST PRESUMPTION

19 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2)

20 The debtor husband was self-employed as an insurance broker and agent until late in the summer 21 of 2008 when he became an independent contractor with American General Insurance ("American 22 General"). That relationship resulted in monthly income of $8,000 beginning in August, 2008. The 23 debtor's income from the prior self-employment had been considerably less than $8,000. The Chapter 24 7 was filed October 30, 2008. Pursuant to the means test, a debtor's ability to repay creditors is based 25 upon a formula which considers income as the average income earned by the debtor in the six months 26 prior to filing the bankruptcy. When a debtor's income fluctuates due to change of employment, loss 27 of job or other reasons, application of the formula often has no relationship to a debtor's actual ability 28 to pay. However, that is the calculation Congress mandated in § 707(b)(2) and is the calculation

1 performed to determine whether a presumption of abuse exists.

2 Application of the “means test” formula in the Form B22A for these debtors results in an income 3 which is below median. For four of the six months prior to filing, the debtor had low income and for 4 the two months immediately prior to filing, he was receiving the higher income from American General.
5 By filing the bankruptcy on October 30, 2008, only the higher American General income from August 6 and September became part of the formula. If the Chapter 7 had been filed two days later, on 7 November 1, 2008, the Form B22A would have reflected three months of lower income and three 8 months of the higher American General income, resulting in the debtors being above median income.

9 The U.S. Trustee argues that the commencement of the case on October 30, 2008, rather than 10 November 1, 2008, was an improper manipulation of the means test. The Code sets forth the formula 11 and formulas are subject to manipulation. The Code allows a debtor to choose the date of the 12 commencement of the case. Any litigant may seek to maximize their legal rights and to enforce those 13 rights to the extent allowed in the law. Choosing to commence the Chapter 7 on October 30, 2008, 14 rather than November 1 is not an indicia of bad faith, but an acceptable exercise of rights granted under 15 the Code. The debtor’s election to commence a bankruptcy on a particular day may affect the 16 presumption arising under § 707(b)(2), but that is the result of the application of the statutory formula.
17 A debtor should not be penalized for choosing to commence the bankruptcy proceeding on a date which 18 maximizes the debtor’s rights under the statute.

19 Another issue relating to § 707(b)(2) is the debtors’ deduction of business expenses on the Form 20 B22A. Expenses under the “means test” formula for self-employed debtors is determined by reference 21 to the “Other Necessary Expenses” section of the IRS Financial Analysis Handbook, but limits those 22 expenses to those actually incurred by the debtor. The “Other Necessary Expense” guideline applicable 23 to this case allows business expenses which are necessary “for the production of income” and “if the 24 taxpayer substantiates and justifies the expenses.”

25 The Amended Form B22A averages the income from the six months pre-petition at $6,080 and 26 then deducts $2,051 on line 4 (b) as an ordinary and necessary business expense. The Schedule “J” filed 27 with the original Chapter 7 petition references monthly business expenses of $1,559. Exhibit “J,” 28 introduced at the evidentiary hearing, is an accounting of the six months actual pre-petition business

1 expenses. The expenses for the six months pre-petition were as follows: April $2,767; May $3,613;
2 June $1,827; July $2,917 (all of which were prior to the relationship with American General); August 3 $1,182; and September $1,189. The average monthly expenses per that exhibit was $2,250, which is 4 $200 a month more than the amount deducted on the Form B22A. The evidence indicated that business 5 expenses had varied from month-to-month and continued to do so. The self-employment prior to the 6 relationship with American General was, according to the debtors, “not profitable” causing financial 7 stress.

8 The itemization reflected on Exhibit “J” includes items, such as telephone, advertising, license 9 and internet service, all of which are related to the business activities of the debtor, both while self-10 employed and in the new relationship with American General. Although the debtors deducted some 11 portion of their mortgage as a business expense from federal income taxes, no such expense is shown 12 on Exhibit “J.” Both the prior self-employment and the relationship with American General require 13 travel by the debtor, although the nature and frequency of the travel changed. For purposes of the 14 “means test” which utilizes the “Other Necessary Expense” guideline of the IRS, the debtors have 15 substantiated the necessity of their deduction of $2,051 on the Form B22A and that the amount of the 16 expense was justified.

17 Allowing the deduction of the $2,051 business expense from the debtors’ income of $6,080 18 results in the debtors being below median income. Thus, no presumption of abuse arises under 19 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(2).

20 TESTS WHEN PRESUMPTION DOES NOT ARISE

21 11 U.S.C. § 707 (b)(3)

22 To determine whether the commencement of a Chapter 7 by below median income debtors 23 constitutes abuse, 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) must be examined. If application of the means test results in 24 a determination of below median income status, the determination of abuse is made on a case-by-case 25 basis after a comprehensive review of the facts presented by the specific case. In re Lamug, 403 B.R.
26 47 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2009).

27 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) provides that when no presumption arises under § 707(b)(2), the court 28 should consider

- 1 (A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or 2 (B) the totality of the circumstances . . . of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

3 The commencement of a bankruptcy proceeding under any chapter of the Code must be 4 consistent with bankruptcy policy and the goals of providing a fresh start to honest but unfortunate 5 debtors, while maximizing repayment to creditors. If a bankruptcy proceeding is not consistent with 6 bankruptcy policy and goals or is filed for an improper purpose, it is an abuse of the bankruptcy system
7 and the Bankruptcy Code. In re Mitchell, 357 B.R. 142 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2006). 11 U.S.C. § 707(b)(3) 8 sets forth two separate and independent tests to determine whether abuse exists in the Chapter 7 context.
9 If the filing fails either test, the Chapter 7 must be dismissed or converted to a Chapter 13.

10 By use of different language in §§ 707(b)(3)(A) and (B), Congress intended two different tests 11 to be utilized in examining whether abuse exists. The first test requires a finding of bad faith on the part 12 of the debtor. The second test requires a finding of abuse based upon the specific debtor's financial 13 situation. The differences in the two tests are both temporal and evidentiary. If Congress uses particular 14 language in one section of a statute, but omits it in another, it must be presumed that Congress acted 15 intentionally. In re Egebjerg, supra. Subsection (A) refers to the debtor's filing of the petition. Thus, 16 the statutory language establishes the time at which the bad faith must exist. Subsection (B) makes no 17 reference to any particular time frame and requires an examination of the totality of the debtor's 18 financial circumstances.

19 WAS THE BANKRUPTCY PETITION FILED IN BAD FAITH?

20 The statutory language of subsection (A) of § 707(b)(3) requires the bad faith to exist at the time 21 of commencing the bankruptcy and it is the debtor's intent and purpose at that time which is the subject 22 of the analysis. The inquiry is focused upon the debtor's conduct. Bad faith may involve a dishonest 23 debtor or nefarious acts, but such motivation or intent is not necessary. Bad faith exists if the filing of 24 the bankruptcy was for a purpose not consistent with the Bankruptcy Code or policy even though the 25 purpose may otherwise be lawful. In re Siegenberg, supra. Absent allegations of subjective intent to 26 commit wrongful acts, the evidence relevant to the determination of bad faith is the evidence which 27
28

1 existed at the time of filing the petition.¹ Evidence relevant to an examination of bad faith under 2 § 707(b)(3)(A) may be the filing of incomplete schedules or the existence of a voidable transfer prior 3 to filing the case, but the inquiry focuses on the debtor's conduct, not the debtor's financial affairs.
4 In re Honkomp, 416 B.R. 647 (Bankr. N.D. Iowa 2009).

5 In this situation, the U.S. Trustee's allegation of bad faith arises from the commencement of the 6 bankruptcy on October 30, 2008, rather than November 1, 2008, the fact that the debtors argued that the 7 income from American General should be classified as a loan rather than income and the pre-petition 8 acquisition of certain vehicles. As previously discussed, the debtors' selection of the date to commence 9 the case is not an indicia of bad faith. Previously, the court determined that although the contract 10 between American General and the debtor labeled the monthly payments as loans and, although the 11 sums advanced by American General are eventually deducted from debtor's commission income, the 12 monthly payments of $8,000 are income for purposes of the means test. The debtors' legal arguments 13 were not frivolous and a bona fide dispute existed as to the nature of the monthly payment by American 14 General. The debtors' litigation of the dispute is not an indicia of bad faith even though the issue was 15 resolved adverse to the debtors.

16 The transactions regarding the vehicles began in January of 2008, approximately ten months 17 prior to filing. In January of 2008, the debtor husband was acting as a self-employed insurance broker 18 and selling health insurance policies in various western states which required him to travel thousands 19 of miles per year in his personal vehicle. While traveling in Wyoming, his 2006 Dodge Ram pickup was 20 destroyed in an accident. Faced with an immediate need for a replacement vehicle in a town with one 21 car dealership and a need for a vehicle suitable for severe driving conditions, the debtor purchased a 22 2008 Dodge Ram pickup for $63,995. This is considered a luxury vehicle and the debtor could have 23 purchased a suitable vehicle with lower operating costs for a smaller purchase price. The debtor could 24 have made a more financially responsible decision, but under the circumstances, the debtor's decision 25 regarding the purchase was not unreasonable.

26 The testimony at trial indicated that at that time the business was making a small profit.

27
28 ¹Evidence of conduct post-petition may be relevant in determining motive or subjective intent, which existed at the time of filing, but no such allegations exist in this case.

1 Sometime after the accident, the business became “stagnant,” meaning that it was “just breaking even.”
2 As the year progressed, the business became unprofitable. The debtor owned a Victory 2007
3 motorcycle. Because it could not be used in the winter, in April, 2008, the debtor used it for a down 4 payment on a new 2009 Toyota Corolla for $20,000, using that as the family’s second vehicle. The 5 value of the motorcycle did not equal the lien amount. The amount financed for the Toyota was 6 $27,000.

7 Also, in the spring of 2008, the debtors attempted to sell the family home. They were 8 contemplating a move to Montana to decrease business expenses or relocate to a smaller, less expensive 9 home without office space. Although they were then current on their payment obligations, they were 10 having difficulties making their monthly financial obligations. The home is a relatively expensive 11 home, which is also used as the location of the debtor’s business, and, when acquired, included space 12 for a dependent. The debtors had no equity in the home and no offers were received to purchase the 13 home. At that time, the debtors consulted an attorney regarding the possibility of a bankruptcy filing.
14 They decided to continue without bankruptcy protection while the husband continued to seek new 15 employment and attempted to make his current business more profitable. The debtors were unable to 16 sell the family home. During the early summer of 2008, they were negotiating with the mortgage lender 17 for a loan modification to reduce their monthly mortgage payments as they had become delinquent in 18 the payments. The modification was effectuated a few weeks prior to the commencement of the 19 bankruptcy.

20 Beginning in August of 2008, the debtor obtained his position with American General as an 21 independent contractor managing its insurance agents. His compensation was set at $8,000 per month, 22 but the set amount declined over a period of four years as it was gradually to be replaced with 23 compensation based upon commissions. The $8,000 per month was significantly more after expenses 24 than the debtor had been making in his business. On August 15, 2008, approximately 10 weeks prior 25 to commencing the Chapter 7, the debtor husband purchased a new 2009 Victory motorcycle for 26 approximately $20,000. Despite the fact he had only four months previously traded a motorcycle for 27 the Toyota as the motorcycle was impractical, the debtor justified the purchase of the new motorcycle 28 as an attempt to save money. The travel requirements for American General were occasional plane

1 travel with once or twice a month short trips in the State of Washington. The debtor planned to use the 2 47 gallons per mile motorcycle rather than the 17 gallons per mile Dodge Ram and thus reduce travel 3 expense.

4 This was a purchase of a luxury good which was unnecessary and merely increased the debtors' 5 monthly payment obligations. Undoubtedly, this purchase occurred in the euphoria of obtaining an 6 increased, set monthly income, but was not just unwise, it was irresponsible. The purchase occurred a 7 mere 10 weeks prior to the filing of the Chapter 7 and at a time when the debtors were not only having 8 difficulty meeting their monthly payment obligations but were in default on their home mortgage. The 9 purchase was approximately four months after the debtor used his prior, older motorcycle as a trade-in 10 on the Toyota, admittedly in part, as a motorcycle is not practical. This new motorcycle was the third 11 vehicle for a family of two. The purchase occurred approximately four months after consulting an 12 attorney regarding a possible bankruptcy filing. This purchase of this unnecessary luxury item merely 13 worsened the debtors' insolvency and occurred at the expense of the debtors' unsecured creditors. Such 14 a purchase must result in a determination of bad faith under § 707(b)(3)(A).

15 DOES THE TOTALITY OF THE DEBTORS' FINANCIAL 16 SITUATION DEMONSTRATE ABUSE?

17 Subsection (B) of § 707(b)(3) contains no temporal limitation. By excluding the language in 18 § 707(b)(3)(A) referring to the date of the filing of the petition, Congress intended some other relevant 19 time frame to apply in (B). Congress could have referred to the six months period pre-petition as it did 20 in § 707(b)(2), but it did not. Absent statutory direction as to the temporal aspect of the determination, 21 the inquiry and determination is made at the time of the evidentiary hearing. In re Schubert, 384 B.R.
22 777 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2008).

23 The language used by Congress requires the examination under this subsection to be an 24 examination of the debtor's "financial situation." Congress could have referred back to the "current 25 monthly income" and "applicable expense amounts" referenced in § 707(b)(2), but did not. Congress 26 used the term "financial situation," and different words must be presumed to have different meanings.
27 Egebjerg, supra. Once the debtor is determined to be below median income and no presumption arises, 28 § 707(b)(3)(B) requires the examination to be of the debtor's entire financial circumstances. A debtor's

1 financial situation certainly includes actual as well as projected monthly income and expenses, but 2 includes other factors indicative of a debtor's financial well-being. For example, an examination of a 3 debtor's financial situation could include an examination of any equity in real property and the amount 4 of exempt property available for the support of the debtor.

5 The test of "totality of the circumstances" referenced in the § 707(b)(3)(B) is a codification of 6 prior standards utilized in the Ninth Circuit and elsewhere. In re Burge, 377 B.R. 573 (Bankr. N.D.
7 Ohio 2007); In re Pak, supra; In re Lamug, supra; In re Baeza, 398 B.R. 692 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2008).
8 In considering whether the commencement of a Chapter 7 is an abuse of the bankruptcy process, pre-9 BAPCPA law is still relevant in determining whether abuse exists under this subpart of BAPCPA.

10 Bankruptcy courts that have addressed § 707(b)(3) since the enactment of BAPCPA have 11 found that the 'totality of the circumstances' tests that were applicable under the former 12 § 707(b) remain applicable under BAPCPA. Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 150, 153; In re
13 Richie, 353 B.R. 569, 575 (Bankr. E.D. Wis. 2006). BAPCPA made changes, however, 14 making it easier for the UST to prove a case for abuse because (a) there is no longer a presumption in favor of granting relief to a debtor, and (b) the standard for dismissal is reduced from 'substantial abuse' to mere 'abuse.' In re Colgate, 2007 WL 1649103 at *3 (Bankr. E.D.N.Y. 2007); Mitchell, 357 B.R. at 153; Richie, 353 B.R. at 574.

15 In re Siegenberg, supra, at p. 6.

16 The original Schedule "I" filed October 30, 2008, reflects the income of $8,000 per month and 17 expenses of $7,669, resulting in a disposable income of $330 per month available to pay unsecured 18 creditors which total approximately $97,000. The ultimate question presented when considering abuse 19 under subsection (B) is whether the debtors have an ability to repay creditors. In re Baeza, supra.

20 At the hearing in the fall of 2009, the debtors' expenses had been reduced. The motorcycle 21 which required monthly payments of $259 and Toyota which required payments of $466 had been 22 surrendered. The terms of the home mortgage has been renegotiated bringing the debtors current on that 23 obligation. The monthly income from American General had been reduced to $6,700. The debtor has 24 now had a year to build new commission income arising from the relationship with American General 25 and, although the regular monthly income from American General will gradually reduce, the amount 26 of commission income will gradually increase. In re Jensen, supra.

27 The totality of circumstances indicate that the debtors' current financial situation is such that 28 they should be able to make some payment to unsecured creditors.

1 CONCLUSION

2 The court finds that the purchase of an unnecessary luxury, a good 10 weeks prior to bankruptcy 3 at a time when monthly obligations were not being met, is conduct which gives rise to a finding of bad 4 faith. Although there was no intention to harm or defraud creditors, bad faith under § 707(b)(3)(A) is 5 present. The court also finds that under § 707(b)(3)(B), the totality of the circumstances indicate that 6 the debtors have some ability to repay creditors. The statute provides that cases such as this will be 7 dismissed or, with the debtors' consent, may be converted to a Chapter 13. Whether the debtors could 8 confirm a Chapter 13 plan and the terms of any such plan are not relevant to this analysis. However, 9 the debtors should be given a choice to convert to a Chapter 13 before the pending Chapter 7 is 10 dismissed. Consequently, the debtors have 10 days after entry of this decision to elect to convert to a 11 Chapter 13 and, if no such election is made, the court will enter an order dismissing the case.

12
13 14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26 Patricia C. Williams
27 Bankruptcy Judge
28

12/30/2009 09:16:30